A Teacher's Pride and Sadness as the School Year Ends

Written by: Ms. Hargis

As the school year comes to an end, I find myself feeling a mix of pride, exhaustion, and a little sadness. Watching my students grow has been one of the most rewarding parts of this job. We've had our challenges, but we've also shared a lot of laughs and meaningful moments.

Now, as I pack up the classroom and say my goodbyes, I'm reminded why I chose to be a teacher in the first place. Summer break is a welcome chance to rest and recharge, but part of me already misses this group and wonders how they'll continue to grow in the years ahead.

A Recap of Our School Year's Memorable Moments

Written by: Baylee Doane

As you may know, the end of our wonderful school year is coming very soon! There are a lot of events that have happened and that are going to happen, and I will be covering them because I'm awesome. Recently, we had our prom, how exciting! We also had our high school seniors walk through the school for memories. Then we had our senior tea time where the seniors get all dressed and pretty to enjoy some treats with their class and family. Tuesday night, we have the senior awards for scholarships. For the last three days of the school year, the seniors will practice for graduation, and we will see them graduate on the 16th at 7pm. We are all so very excited but sad to see them go. Come see it all on the 16th, we expect everyone to be there!

The Countdown to Disaster: A Personal Plea to Address Global Warming

Written by: Baylee Doane

Over the years, I have gained more knowledge about global warming, and I can say it's a major problem that not a lot of people care about. I think about it at least once a day because I cannot fathom how people can just destroy this earth for their own needs. I could do without everything I have now if that meant it helped keep our planet alive and working. We have a countdown clock that tells us when the world is going to end.

That's a pretty ridiculous thing if you ask me, but it makes my heart break seeing all of these animals and people dying because of the society we live in when we should be praising this beautiful world for all we have.

The Power of Family Ties: A Heartfelt Reflection

Written by: Hailey Royston

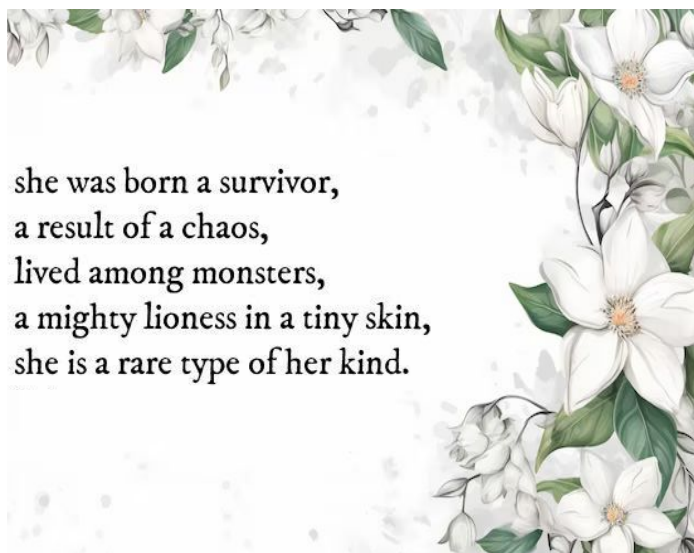

The most important thing to me is my family because they mean the world to me, even though we go through ups and downs together. Yes, we argue often, and yes, we call each other names, but that's only because of the love we have for each other. We express our love in different ways, but we will always care for one another deeply.

I hope that one day they won't leave my life until it's the right time for them to go. My mom always reminds me that everyone eventually passes away, and there's no way to stop that. You just have to accept it and move on. They will always be there in spirit, even if they are no longer physically present, especially during tough times or bad days.

The Power of Resilience

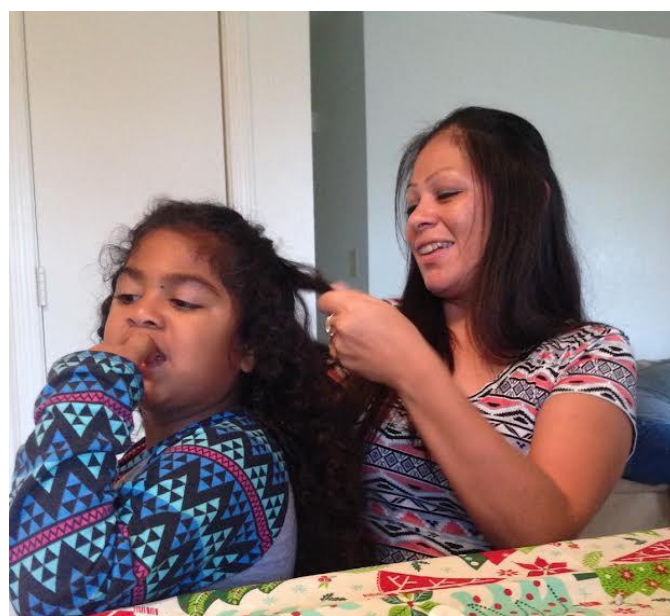

Written by: Chloe Landreth

she was born a survivor,
a result of a chaos,
lived among monsters,
a mighty lioness in a tiny skin,
she is a rare type of her kind.

Recently, I've been caught up in the Kayla Malec situation. Each day, I watch her heal and grow from the domestic violence she was put through. From telling her story to making a podcast to wanting the justice she deserves. Out of everything, the way the lords protected her and how she is thriving is remarkable. Not many people get the justice they deserve. She's proved that your story matters. She's a strong woman, and she'll continue to be so.

My Mama

Written by: Kaytlynn King

I want to use this final project to write about someone important to me instead of something. That special someone is my mama. Without her, I honestly don't know where I would be in life right now. She is the one who truly inspires me to accomplish my goals and reach toward my dreams. She pushes me to be better and to work in everything I do. I know I can talk to her about anything, whether good or bad. She has always told me, "Don't let your past be a reflection of how you carry yourself in the future." I thank her every day for instilling that in my mind. She's the hardworking, determined, and intelligent person I know. I know she goes through battles that she doesn't talk about, but that never stops her from being the best mother she can be to me and my brothers. God knew I needed her as my mama, and I thank him every single day for her. I love you more than life, Mama, always! That's why I chose to write about her!

Beyond Betrayal: The Power of Faith in a Broken World

Written by: Chloe Landreth

I think that no one is trustworthy anymore. Not even myself, just because no one is perfect. So, because no one is perfect, no one is trustworthy. Some of the best people aren't because they slip up, too. Sometimes it really sucks. Everyone has been betrayed or has betrayed before. From the hardships I've been through, the only person I trust is Jesus. He heals and forgives. He also teaches you lessons that help you grow.

Everything seems so hard, but having faith tolerates it. Nothing nor anyone is perfect, you'll sin till you die. Having faith even when falling short gets us through a lot more than we realize.

Dogs are Man's Best Friend

Written by: Chase Foraker

What is important to someone who moves around every four years? Well, my dogs, of course! I've had them for many years, and no matter what happens in life, they are always there for me. I wouldn't change that for anything.

However, my sister is constantly trying to get rid of them, even though we had agreed to keep them. The issue is that they like to bark at night. Regardless, I love my dogs.

The Unfair Label

*Written by:
Erick Jaramillo*

The thing that's important to me right now is the nation's deportations. I get that some immigrants deserve to be deported for doing bad things, but there are still good people out there, and people call us illegal aliens just because we come and take jobs, but it's not that we are taking the jobs, we just work harder and earn them. You see so many homeless people out there asking for money, meanwhile the immigrants are asking for jobs, and not for money, and people say we are stealing them, even though we are willing to work hard for what we have.

Ever since Britain left the Indian Colony alone in 1948, India and Pakistan have conflicted with small aggressions, and now, recently, India is launching missile strikes on Pakistan, making tensions high, and with "terrorists" being executed, things don't seem bright in the future.
